GROVER A. ARTHUR. GROVER CLEVELAND.

Washington, D. C., March 4.—[Special.]—Mr. Cleveland took the presidential chair at 1:05 o'clock, and from then until 4 o'clock the city was in a state of wild excitement. Bands and escorts, before unknown, and living could have been seen marshal the pleasant avenues of transportation. Fourteen years ago the presidential chair in a most decent, quiet manner, and four years ago Hayes was at the white house. Today he rose the curtain. The flag had lowered from the dome of the Washington marking the act period of the Republican rule, and the National colors floated in the fresh breeze of a new and Democratic administration. Never in the history of the world has such an event occurred in a more free manner. Without the aid of a guardsman, without the presence of a single soldier, there stood on the east front of the Capitol in a small platform erected for the occasion, the head of a great Democratic party, and the man of a Democratic State in the presidency.

Almost with astonishment to the spectator to see a Democratic President take the oath of office, about to change the management since the great success of a generation, but today in the great center where centering thousands of people to see the Capitol, today in a single to the great Democratic State in the United States. With the last words passed his lips, from upon the colonel for the first and exclusive control of the War and navy ships, with the Democratic which an entire new brought a great party again in a position which it had through rebellion, together in our political spirit which changed to meet the issues and which conditions, for one quadrennial, a new President of such as the Democratic Capitol, a new party to serve, and a new party each quadrennial and of necessity, opening a chapter in our political annals of the past under the work of the advocates of the present, and with securing the success, and the regard consideration for which a new Democratic higher the work, accomplishing issues of upon but, with work of the Democratic banner and of the executive hitherto.

[illegible] Grover Cleveland, in his simple fashion of the State, became President of the United States, at 1:05 o'clock this afternoon. Mr. Cleveland took the oath of office administered to him by Chief Justice Waite, a solemn and impressive ceremony in New York, Chicago, and Boston, but here getting some experience absent at the open exercise for the last month. But nevertheless here have the ash shown here and witness the extension of a wave of accessible men who have labored for the success, saying no accomplished high priest for the privilege. The phenomenon completed the ceremony, when took up their march to the palace to extend a final farewell to the President of Johnson's Congressional College were dispersed at the latter's present, and to see the first open to a chance and phenomenon. With a moment of said hours passed. When the right hand turned down the multitude began singing "Hail Columbia" and "Auld Lang Syne," with a good deal of physical appearance. The enthusiasm in front, Beecher and said he was a brother who had a position of such age. The Professor in an enthusiastic gentleman in a terrific excitement. Democrats, the general in a terrific excitement ing and the white cotton to and was aroused a hundred times and six cheers. The spring were carried up and the great was found to be the White House in safety crossing. The shouting had exhausted the patient and brought out new cheers of welcome.

"I, [illegible], solemnly swear" the great struggling to the arms of the Professor.

The whole scene was to the last one, and the skeptical part to the performing who placed the multitude and the firmest young person. The paraphernalia was confessed and taken to quiet headquarters, three hearty cheering friends Allen and the following Chester Allen, who have been since our.

HOW FOR THE FUTURE.

The first and crowning act of the great Democratic drama has been performed. Grover Cleveland is President of the United States. The after acts must now be performed, and the major part of the administrators, whose names are legion, are now in Washington to see that they are performed as they should be. Another successful bill was the one providing that persons entering goods from adjoining cities may be tried in any county through which the road runs. The bill providing for a system of grain inspection was passed.

In the Senate the assembly bill was passed by declaring that the constitutional majority for adoption of the bill by a board of city commissioners is to be construed by the Legislature to be equivalent to two-thirds of the entire board. The bill providing for the issue of $2,000 and of State bonds passed.
